As a licensed journeyman electrician. I understand the importance of the schooling and field experience needed to evaluate and install all electrical components. The funny thing about electricity is you don't see it, smell it or hear it until something goes wrong. Once there is an incident when something wrong it's too late. When it goes wrong it usually ends in tragedy. Becoming licensed in the trade helps you understand the why. Why something is dangerous. Why something is wrong. Why something is bound to fail. When unlicensed, untrained and unqualified people are allowed to work on and with electrical systems. It's not a matter of if but when something will go wrong. That's why I believe not passing H-7015 as drafted is a tragedy.
