To whom it may concern,

As a registered apprentice I am writing to you in regards to the "testimony in support of H-7015 as drafted". In my personal experience there's much more to electrical work than meets the eye. It is crucial that the person inspecting, assembling, and certifying any electrical work truly understands the integrity of the electrical profession. This type of work can be very dangerous and if not done correctly can result in serious injury or worse. This knowledge isn't something that someone can learn in a few hours or a quick certification class. There's a reason why it takes a journeyman five years to complete their apprenticeship and become licensed. Not only can H-7015 be a danger, it also takes away work from many hard working electricians that are working to provide for their families and their livelihoods. I am one of the many people that this would be affecting. I strongly urge you to reconsider on behalf of all electricians.

Sincerely,
Sidney Jablonski
