

To Whom It May Concern,

I am a homeschooling mother of six children, aged 15 years down to 15 months, and we have been dedicated to homeschooling for the past 10 years. Our homeschooling journey began in Hong Kong, where we faced significant challenges due to limited support. Moving to Rhode Island was a welcomed change, as we found ample resources and a community of families that offered us valuable support.

We have experienced both the absence and the abundance of support in different areas, and I can attest that such support makes a considerable difference.

I firmly believe that all parents desire the best for their children. They wish for their children to be independent agents, capable of choosing what, how, and when they learn.

Having grown up attending traditional schools in Asia, I am especially committed to ensuring that my children—and others—have the freedom to make their own educational choices and to value and enjoy the process of learning and personal development.

Therefore, I kindly ask you to reconsider this bill. I am convinced that families who opt for homeschooling will provide their children with the most tailored, effective, and meaningful education for their individual needs.

Yours Sincerely,

Po Tim King
