

I have personally been a victim of corporate bullying and have witnessed it as well. Since starting here at DHS, I have had a colleague transfer to another state position in another department due to what she witnessed from a supervisor known for bullying and what she was afraid of having to endure by working for that supervisor. There should be a zero-tolerance policy and workers should not work or live in fear of retribution when reporting incidences of bullying, it robs us of valuable talent, causes a toxic work environment and diminishes productivity, as well as costing money and resources by causing physical and mental distress.
