RE: Senate Bill 2380

Dear Chairwoman Murray and Members of the Committee on Health & Human Services,

When Brown Health announced it would continue operating the Noreen Stonor Drexel Birthing Center at Newport Hospital (the “Birthing Center”), our community felt relief. The decision was significant, but the work is still not finished. Long-term stability and funding remain unresolved, and the risks that sparked these original pieces of legislation are still present.

I’m here speaking tonight on these bills because no community should be subject to the scrambling Newport endured to maintain well-functioning, core components of our healthcare system, like maternity units.

As you will hear from various perspectives in our community, the Birthing Center is essential to our community and underpins important parts of this state’s economy and the broader healthcare system. Its potential closure was never theoretical—its closure would have functionally eliminated access to maternal care for many of our families.

Last summer, myself and my colleagues on the Newport City Council were the first public body to engage on this issue, and more than 200 residents showed up and filled Newport City Hall to urge Brown Health to keep the Birthing Center open. Providers, doulas, parents, and community leaders warned that shutting it down would endanger patients, strain our emergency response resources, and threaten the viability of key employers.

The consequences of closing the Birthing Center would be immediate. Expectant mothers would end up in the ER or be diverted off-island requiring hour plus long trips. Ambulances would be tied up transporting laboring patients, stretching our community’s limited capacity and delaying responses to other emergencies. As our Fire Chief testified, closure of the Birthing Center would mean women delivering in ambulances, Ubers, and emergency rooms. These are not hypothetical scenarios; they are predictable outcomes.

The economic impact is equally serious. Newport is already a difficult place for young families to build a life, and the presence of major employers, like those at Naval Station Newport, are predicated on the presence of the Hospital and its basic services. Reduced access to basic healthcare would push key employers and families away and widen disparities for those without flexible jobs or reliable transportation.

The coalition we've built shows just how deeply Rhode Islanders value maternal care. But this fight also exposes a broader crisis: our healthcare system is at its breaking point, and basic services are being cut. We are past the point of studies and pilot projects. We need to define the basics of what we expect from our healthcare system, and resolutely protect the parts of the system, like the Birthing Center, that deliver.

The Birthing Center was saved because the community acted with urgency and clarity. That isn't going to be enough for similar units in the system. Protecting maternal health and rebuilding the core of our healthcare system: primary care, cannot rest on the backs of nurses, recent and expectant mothers, and overworked doctors.

We, as policymakers, must define them as foundational to our healthcare system and ensure we aren't stuck in an annual fight to make the healthcare system put people over profits. For these reasons, we strongly encourage you to support S-2380.

Thank you for your attention to this matter and your commitment to Rhode Island families.

Sincerely,

Xay Khamsyvoravong
